Web Designer

A Web Designer works with the graphics component of Web development. Using images, CSS, and XHTML, the Web Designer often begins by producing a page mockup in a graphics application such as Adobe Photoshop. Once this design has been approved by a client, the designer produces an HTML template, CSS files, and all the images needed for the Web site. These files can then be passed along to a Web developer or directly to the client.

Web Developer

A Web Developer incorporates all aspects of creating a Web site for the World Wide Web, including Web design (graphic design, XHTML, CSS, usability, and semantics), programming, server administration, content management, marketing, testing, and deployment.
